

MR. RHODES' AGENTS.

Cecil Rhodes was a great Englishman, and like all great Englishmen completely devoted to his own nation. He made the extension of the British dominion in South Africa his life work. He believed without reservation in the British empire as a power for good in the world and in his remarkable will made provision for the use of his fortune to extend that influence. The Rhodes scholarships have been a tremendous asset to the British empire. Their value to the nations on whose people they have been bestowed has been dubious, a result with which Mr. Rhodes was naturally unconcerned.

Rep. J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas is the author of the slick termed resolution seeking to pledge congress in advance to a world super-government. He is a Rhodes scholar. Rep. Robert Hale of Maine is touring the country, making speeches on behalf of the similar Ball-Burton-Hatch resolution, pending in the senate. He is another Rhodes scholar. Such Rhodes scholars as Herbert Agar and Elmer Davis were in the forefront of the campaign to drag us into the war before Pearl Harbor.

No Rhodes scholar can escape the suspicion of being, consciously or unconsciously, an alien agent. All of them have been subsidized by foreign money. The fact that they boast of the subsidy they received rather than attempt to conceal it is not important. The scholarships were created to corrupt Americans and it is obvious that they have been successful in part—to what extent we do not know.

All of the Rhodes scholars in this country should declare themselves. If they still possess loyalty to the American Union, they should state the fact and make it apparent by their public acts. If their allegiance has been subverted, they should have the public decency to admit it and present themselves honestly as British agents and not as American citizens.

FINGER PRINT THEM.

When the American Rhodes scholars, educated in England with the money of an Englishman who intended that they should help to bring the United States back into the British empire, were shown in THE TRIBUNE to be occupying high positions in our federal government, THE TRIBUNE offered them space in its columns to absolve themselves of the suspicion of seditious activity.

THE TRIBUNE named 49 Rhodes scholars and 14 other Oxonians on the federal pay roll and identified their jobs, most of them policy making positions. It told how Cecil John Rhodes, the great diamond and gold mine proprietor and British Imperialist, conspired to launch a political revolution. His Oxford scholarships were intended to establish "a secret society" aimed at extending British rule thruout the world, and particularly over the United States.

Not one of these imperialist trained Americans who invited suspicion by accepting the Rhodes gratuity has offered to affirm his loyalty to the United States or to deny devotion to Rhodes' imperialism. Their silence will not allay suspicion, but can only serve to heighten it.

The Rhodes scholars, who are supporting various international schemes, insist that the United States, as a sovereign nation, must cease to exist. They maintain that thru pact and alliance it must become the tail of the British kite in any post-war world acceptable to them. The success of the Oxford conspiracy in America must be a source of immense satisfaction to Cecil Rhodes' countrymen.

Any man who chose to have himself educated in a foreign country, no matter what country it was, must fall under suspicion along with the Rhodes scholars. He deliberately turned his back on the advantage of an American education to be schooled as a foreigner. It is inevitable that the alien viewpoints gained thru study in foreign countries during impressionable years will be retained.

With the Oxford conspiracy before the nation as an example, it would be wise now for congress to pass a law requiring all foreign educated Americans to register with the federal government, and it might be a good idea to have them finger printed as well.
